

Course Description

The position of triage can be an exciting, eventful and sometimes frustrating assignment for both the seasoned and novice emergency nurse. Responsibilities inherent in this position include prompt, appropriate bed assignments, crowd control and excellent communication skills along with the ability to multitask and deal with multiple stimuli. The art and science of triage require experience, knowledge, stamina and a good sense of humor. This course will serve as a learning experience regarding the myriad patient presentations that the triage nurse faces each day. An overview of the ESI system will be discussed with patient scenarios incorporated throughout the program.

Program Learning Outcomes

This program prepares the learner to:

- Understand the true “art” of triage within the definition of the triage position.
- List differential diagnoses based on chief complaints.
- Triage patients appropriately based on an understanding of potential outcomes for the patient.
- Describe the criteria for ESI placement of patients.
- Place patients into appropriate ESI categories.
